Zero Lot Line Development

Welford Sanders. 1982. (Planning Advisory Service Report No. 367.) 22 pp. $10.

Zero-lot line zoning (ZLL) is a popular way to keep the most important characteristics of conventional, single-family, detached housing on small lots. Until recently, the most common way to regulate ZLL development has been to allow it in PUDs. But this approach has proven too flexible and costly. This report focuses on two alternative approaches to regulating ZLL development: allowing ZLL housing "by right" in separate districts or as exceptions in existing residential districts. It shows how to adapt local zoning ordinances to deal with ZLL developments and discusses location and design considerations that affect the cost, quality, and public acceptance of ZLL housing. Includes sample ordinances and a bibliography.

A New Workshop from the Planners Training Service

PLANNERS TRAINING SERVICE

AICP American Institute of Certified Planners
An Institute of the American Planning Association

Management Skills for Planners

January 13-14 San Diego

February 17-18 New Orleans

March 17-18 Philadelphia

This workshop is designed to help planners develop and improve their management skills. Workshop instructors include a management consultant with extensive training experience and two planners who have had wide experience in evaluating management practices and directing planning agencies. You will learn about general principles of management as well as specific management techniques for use in planning agencies. Whether you are a planning director, a division chief, or a supervisor of only one or two people, this workshop will provide practical advice and information that you can use on the job.

Brochures on the workshop were mailed to all APA members and subscribers in November. Others may receive a brochure by calling or writing to John Waxman, APA, 1313 E. 60th St., Chicago, IL 60637. 312-955-9100.
